Look a little closer

Edinburgh's Royal Botanic Garden uses living plants to connect pleasure, study and conservation. A short outdoor route can be as rewarding as trying to cover the whole garden. Read labels for origins and habitats, then look closely at form and texture. Major works can affect glasshouses and paths; check current notices and distinguish garden access from separately ticketed activities.

Something to notice

Find two plants from different habitats. What clues do their leaves offer about how they live?

A little consideration

Stay on permitted public paths, leave entrances clear and respect residents, workers and other visitors.
