Look a little closer

Holyrood Park brings rocky slopes, lochs and open ground close to central Edinburgh. Arthur’s Seat is a prominent feature, but a visit need not include a summit. Choose a route suited to your ability and current weather. Path closures, steep ground and exposure matter; follow official notices and protect both the landscape and its archaeological traces.

Something to notice

From a safe path, compare the rock forms with the built city beside them.

A little consideration

Stay on permitted public paths, leave entrances clear and respect residents, workers and other visitors.
