Look a little closer

Ponte Vecchio carries a street of shops across the Arno, turning a river crossing into an enclosed urban passage. From the banks, notice how the buildings project over the water; on the bridge, use the open central views to understand the setting. Shops and the corridor above are separate from the public crossing and follow their own access rules.

Something to notice

Compare the bridge from a riverbank with the experience of walking across it.

A little consideration

Stay on permitted public paths, leave entrances clear and respect residents, workers and other visitors.
