Look a little closer

The MAAM interprets archaeological heritage associated with ceremonies in the high Andes. Its Llullaillaco collection includes offerings and the preserved remains of three Inca children, presented under strict conservation conditions; visitors can engage with the history without travelling to the remote mountain sites.

Something to notice

Exhibitions include human remains and the history of child sacrifice. Consider this before visiting, especially with children; displays rotate for conservation.

A little consideration

Treat the collections and the cultures they represent respectfully and follow all gallery photography instructions.
